This FREE one-hour seminar could be the beginning of a new life for you. Don't miss it!

I have been researching, reading, attending classes and consulting with experts in the scientific community all to create my Peripheral Neuropathy Treatment Program. "I have had burning in my feet for the past 5 years, and I have been on meds with no relief. This is the first time in 5 years that I don't have burning. It's life changing!"

- Maggie P.

"The numbness had gotten so bad, that I couldn't enjoy life. Starting this treatment has been the best decision of my life...I can finally dance again!"

RED LINE REHEARSAL

South Side shutdown gets mixed reviews on first day, but tougher test looms

Chicago Tribune

Marie Drake already was displeased Sunday morning when she boarded a free shuttle bus near the 63rd Street Red Line station. The CTA, she said, hadn't done enough to explain the five-month shutdown of the Red Line's Dan Ryan branch that had started just hours earlier.

Drake's frustration grew when she asked her bus driver whether the shuttles would operate overnight.

"It's new to me, too," the driver said. "Ask a supervisor."

"They should have got you better information," Drake told him. "Customers are very upset, and I know I'm one of them."

Drake was far from alone in expressing frustration, but others complimented the CTA as Red Line trains began diverting to Green Line tracks south of the Roosevelt station. The comparatively sparse crowd of Sunday riders, many heading to work or church, offered a test run for the CTA before tens of thousands of more passengers plot out a new commute to the office Monday, the first weekday that the Dan Ryan branch will be closed.

Construction crews are tearing out and rebuilding the well-worn tracks on the Red Line's South Side route and improving eight of the route's nine stations. The ninth station, at 95th Street, is set for a complete overhaul and expansion starting in 2014. Riders are promised a smoother, faster ride toward downtown when the work is finished.

In the meantime, though, customers such as Kris Golden must navigate a new network of shuttle buses, revised service maps and potential delays. Golden and his 10-year-old son, Sky, were traveling Sunday from their home on the Far South Side to Sky's basketball game in Schaumburg. The express shuttle from 95th to Garfield worked well, Golden said.

"We were a little bit taken off course," he said, "but we got here quicker than we normally did if we took the Red Line."

Golden, a barber who often uses the Red Line to make house calls, said he will have to plot out new routes with trains rerouted until autumn.

"It's going to take some getting used to," he said. "But it seems like they're trying to solve it."

Outside the Garfield Green Line station, CTA President Forrest Claypool and board Chairman Terry Peterson expressed confidence that the agency had prepared well for the closures, though they encouraged commuters to budget plenty of extra time as they figure out their new routes.

"The track literally has to be torn down to the dirt and rebuilt," Claypool said in a morning news conference.

He described the project as a "once-in-a-generation" effort, not a "small, temporary patch."

'Black enough' is not a thing

Anthony Roberts

redeye@tribune.com
@anthwriter

I listen to rock music, but I'm far more into classical. "Seinfeld" is one of my favorite shows, ever. I play tennis every summer, and I'm a Trekkie. The question is: Am I black enough?

Should that be the question? Of course not.

While appearing on Huffington Post Live

last week, Wayne Brady was asked about being used as pop culture's standard for not being black enough when Bill Maher ignorantly referred to President Obama as not being a "real" black man. It's an old but ongoing story, and clearly it still stings Brady. His reaction: "That's bull[bleep]."

While Maher's statement seems ludicrous at best, it does raise an issue that is in the minds of many but spoken by only a few.

Part of me gets it. It's embedded in us to make judgments, not necessarily with malicious intent but in an attempt to better understand the world around us. It does, however, become dangerous when these judgments and assumptions become widely accepted as a form of truth.

As an HBO talk show host, Maher has a certain level of credibility that adds validity to his statements, whether they are true or false. As opinion becomes the new fact, we have to be careful of what type of messages we are putting out there to the public.

Take Brady, for example. He is an Emmy Award-winning performer and a dark-skinned black man who couldn't escape his "blackness" even if he tried, yet he still has to endure ridicule about not being enough of what others think he should be.

To measure one's "blackness," or any other way of categorizing a person based on superficial criteria, is ridiculous. Angelina Jolie recently announced that she underwent a double mastectomy. Does that make her something other than a "real" woman?

Wayne Brady
GETTY IMAGES FILE

As a writer, I am a proponent of free speech and believe we are all entitled to our opinions. But having the luxury of expressing an opinion does not relieve us from being responsible. Brady is not a caricature, not a stereotype and, thus, not necessarily understood by a lot of people who may have had a limited experience with people of color (the key word there being "people").

As people, we all are unique and add our own contributions to the cultural melting pot in which we live. There is no concrete definition of what it means to be black, to be white, to be Asian or any other category that you may recognize. Understanding this is crucial to understanding each other.

While turning to Maher for cultural insight probably is not the way to go, we do have to find ways to break these barriers that exist between us.

So, I ask again: Am I black enough? Hopefully by this point the question seems as absurd to you as it does to me. The next time you find yourself questioning if someone is enough of what you think he or she should be, do us all a favor. Don't.

Saving their schools

3 days of protests target CPS ahead of key board vote

Chicago Tribune

Beads of sweat dripped down Jitu Brown's face as he addressed about 150 marchers who had gathered Sunday afternoon outside Overton Elementary School in Bronzeville.

The school at East 49th Street and South Indiana Avenue is slated for closure as part of Chicago Public Schools' plan to shutter 53 elementary schools and one high school program.

Closing Overton and sending the school's students to nearby Mollison Elementary will force children to risk their lives to get to school, said Brown, a parent and organizer with the Kenwood Oakland Community Organization.

"There is no way [CPS] can keep people safe walking through this danger zone," he yelled into a megaphone. Earlier this month, a man was fatally shot along the route that Overton students might take to their new school, according to Brown and police reports.

The marchers were on their second of a three-day, citywide protest against the proposed closings.

Concerns about student safety are among the many objections that teachers, parents and community activists have raised in response to the closure plan.

CPS officials say the closures are necessary because many schools are more than half empty and the district faces a $1 billion budget gap next year.

In response to safety concerns, the district has pledged to spend millions of dollars to expand its Safe Passage program, which stations adults along school routes to keep watch as students travel to and from school.

As the sweaty marchers made their way through South Side neighborhoods Sunday afternoon, supporters honked from their cars and residents stepped out of their homes

CTU LEADER RE-ELECTED

Chicago Teachers Union President Karen Lewis, an often controversial leader who took on Mayor Emanuel in a strike last fall and has been leading the fight against the district's plan to close schools, was re-elected to a second three-year term Friday, according to preliminary and still unofficial results released by the union.

to gawk and cheer.

"Rahm Emanuel, we're no fools; we won't let you close our schools," the marchers chanted while waving signs with slogans like "Public education is a civil right" and "No more failed education experiments."

The three-day series of marches through neighborhoods with schools on the closure list was part of a final push organized by the Chicago Teachers Union and community groups before the Chicago Board of Education votes Wednesday on the closure plan. The marches will culminate Monday afternoon with a rally outside City Hall.

Review: Low-income CTA riders paying more

Chicago Tribune

A new analysis shows that about 52 percent of minority and low-income CTA customers are paying higher fares this year.

The federally mandated civil rights review conducted by the transit agency focused on the effect of the Jan. 14 increases in CTA pass prices. It found that minorities and low-income individuals pay their fares with cash or buy one-day passes and seven-day passes at a higher rate than other CTA customers.

Tabulated from customer surveys, the results are in line with the long-held assumption that it is harder for low-income individuals to prepay their fares by doling out the money for more deeply discounted 30-day passes or setting aside transit funds in pre-loaded smart cards such as the Chicago Cards.

Despite the hike in pass prices, which ranged as high as 74 percent for a 1-day pass, from $5.75 to $10, the analysis concluded that the CTA successfully "minimized or mitigated disproportionately high and adverse impacts" on minority and low-income populations.

Severe storms hammer Plains

A tornado half a mile wide struck near Oklahoma City on Sunday, part of a massive storm front that hammered the central U.S. News reports said at least one person had died.

By early Sunday evening, 19 tornadoes had touched down in parts of Iowa, Oklahoma and Kansas, according to the National Weather Service and local news reports.

Fox News reported that one person was killed in Shawnee, Okla., east of Oklahoma City.

Police in Shawnee could not immediately be reached to confirm the report.

Officials of the National Weather Service in Oklahoma issued a series of increasingly urgent warnings in the late afternoon and evening, including an alert on Twitter about a tornado striking Pink, a town on the edge of Oklahoma City.

"Large tornado west of Pink!" the post read. "Take cover RIGHT NOW in Pink! DO NOT WAIT!"

An extreme weather system stretching from north Texas to Minnesota had been building for hours Sunday when a "large tornado" touched down near Wichita, Kan., at 3:45 p.m., according to a weather service alert.

Another alert warned of the likelihood of "exceptionally powerful, severe thunderstorms capable of destructive hail as large as baseballs," especially over southeast Kansas in the evening.

Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Iowa were in the path of the system.

Lebanese Hezbollah militants attacked a Syrian rebel-held town alongside Syrian troops Sunday and Israel threatened more attacks on Syria to rein the militia in, highlighting the risks of a wider regional conflict if planned peace talks fail.

Obama to grads: Help others

President Obama urged graduates of Atlanta's Morehouse College, a celebrated historically black school, on Sunday to use their education to help others and to work for "something larger than yourself," citing the example of Martin Luther King Jr.

2013 Stanley Cup Playoffs

HAWKS

WESTERN CONFERENCE SEMIFINALS ★ GAME 3

WINGS FAN REPORT

What makes Detroit fans tick? Here are five findings from Rob Cressy's trip to Tin Lizzie for Game 1 of the series against the Blackhawks.

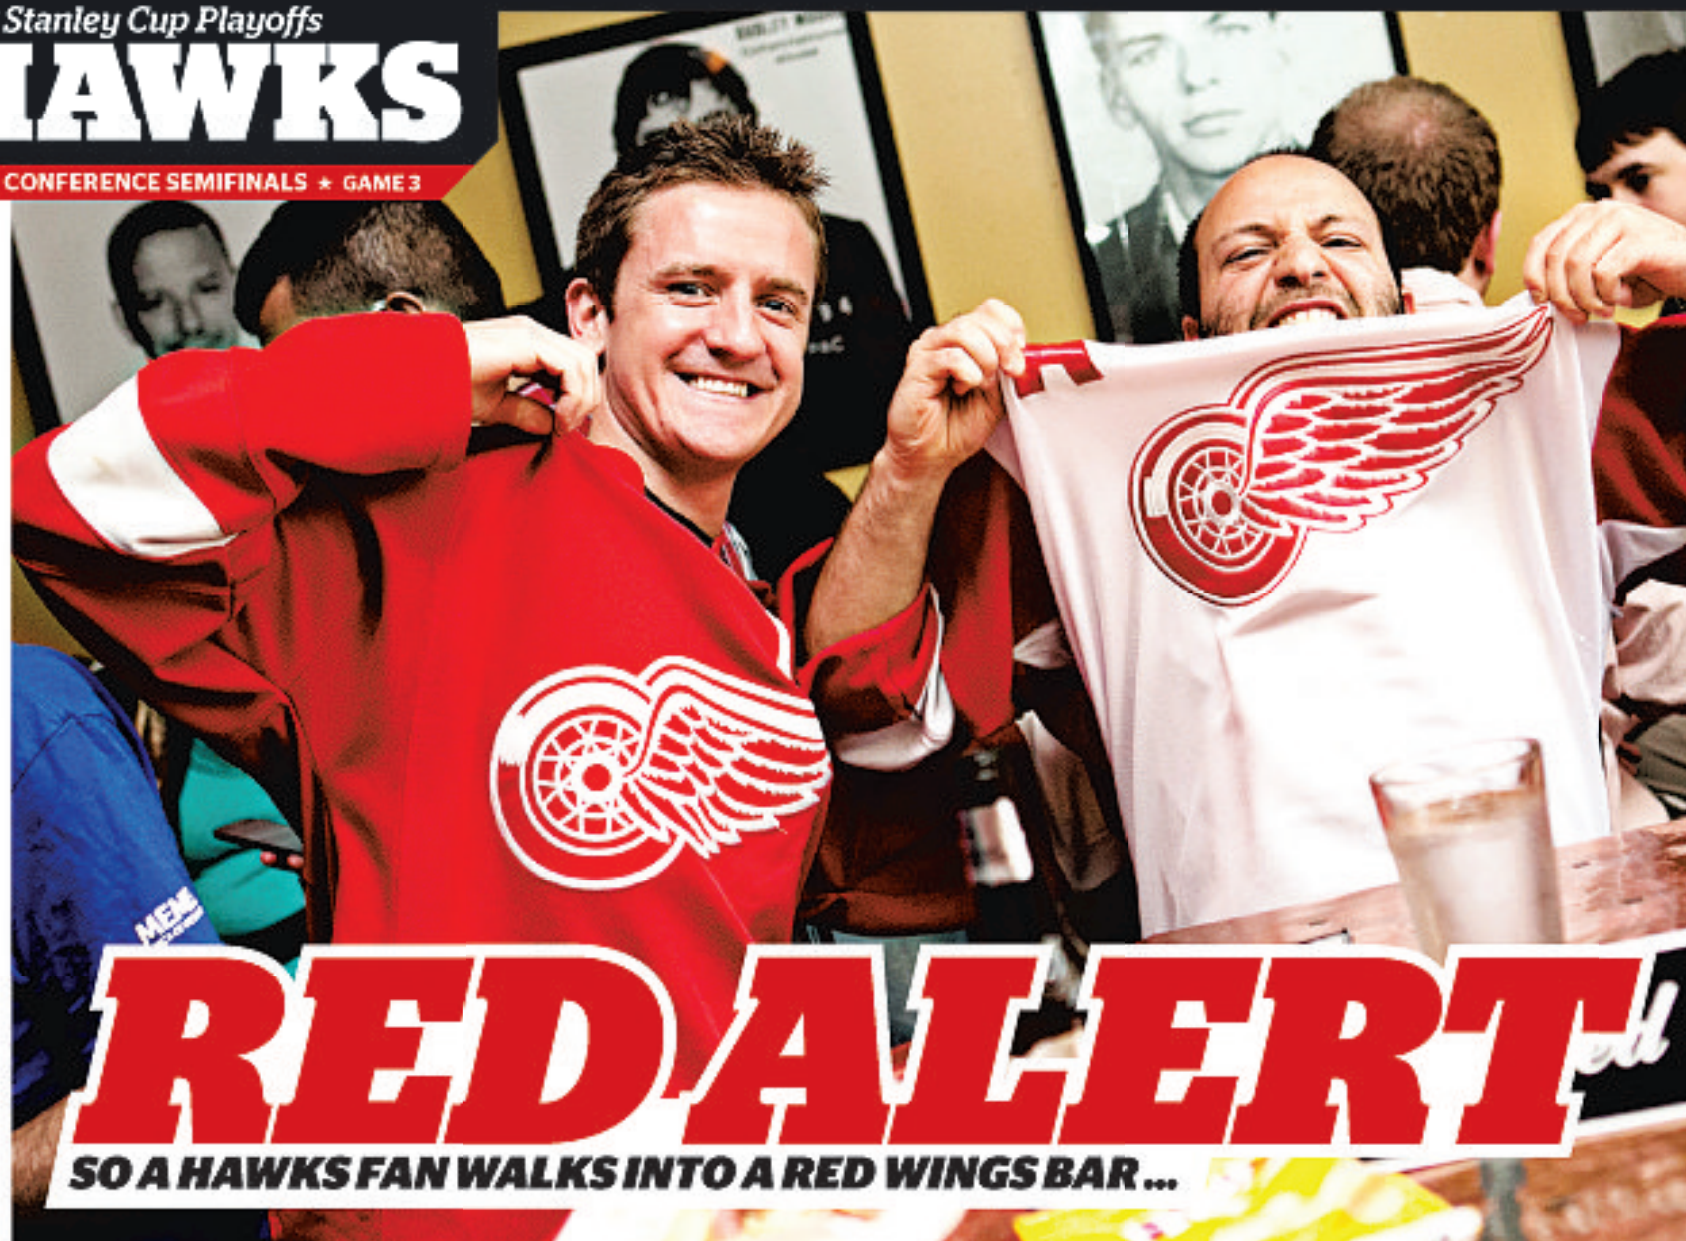

1 There don't seem to be a great deal of fair-weather Wings fans. At Tin Lizzie, there was a variety of jerseys showcased, from several eras.

2 Jonathan Toews is invisible. When talking about the Blackhawks with Wings fans, there were numerous mentions of Patrick Kane and Marian Hossa, but none of the Hawks captain. Hmmm...

3 Red Wings fans love to talk about the success of previous teams and believe that will help them win this series. Well, that's never really helped the Bulls. Or the Cubs, for that matter.

4 Before the series began, most Wings fans said their team would win in seven games. Of course, they have to say that because they are the underdogs and that's how they won their first-round series.

5 Red Wings fans do not have an equivalent of the "Detroit sucks" chant. Nor do they have a goal song like "Chelsea Dagger." Clearly a win in Chicago's column.

Rob Cressy

» @rob_cressy

Editor's note: As the Blackhawks and Detroit face off in the postseason for what might be the last time for a while, it's the perfect time to see how the other half cheers. RedEye sent Rob Cressy, dressed in Blackhawks gear, to Red Wings stronghold Tin Lizzie (2483 N. Clark St.) for Game 1. Here's what he saw.

PREGAME

Like Iceman being surrounded by enemy MiGs in "Top Gun," I was engulfed in enemy fire immediately. There were few Blackhawks fans in sight. Fewer than five, to be exact. I went into the evening with a few questions on my mind:

- » How many times am I going to hear "Don't Stop Believin'?"
- » Will someone rock a jersey of a current Red Wings player other than Henrik Zetterberg or Pavel Datsyuk?

» Will someone use his hand as a map to show me where he's from?

With all the success the Red Wings franchise has had, I expect this to be a knowledgeable, passionate fan base that appreciates good hockey. Since the Blackhawks are the favorites in this series, how will Wings fans embrace the underdog role? Wait a minute. Underdog role? Please. This is the NHL playoffs, where seeding is as relevant as Scott Baio.

Come game time, the bar was packed with a sea of red and white jerseys. Steve Yzerman had top billing, followed by Zetterberg. There was one Dan Cleary jersey, a Chris Osgood but no Jimmy Howards, a few Brendan Shanahans, but it was the lone Vladimir Konstantinov jersey that most impressed me. Ball so hard, my friend.

I had my first conversation about euchre (the card game was introduced to Michiganders by German settlers) 20 minutes before the game started, and five minutes later I heard my first, "Blackhawks fans aren't real fans—they don't even know the players" comment. This was a common theme among Wings fans who seem to think of Blackhawks fans as fair weather. Them's fightin' words.

FIRST PERIOD

The Blackhawks jumped out to a 1-0 lead on a Marian Hossa goal and the place was silent. I didn't hear F-bombs being dropped or Hossa's name being cursed. This surprised me. I would have expected more vitriol coming out of Wings fans' mouths, considering it was Hossa.

In general, Red Wings fans' thoughts on Hossa are as pleasant as watching "Waterworld" on repeat. Playing the scorned lover card, they are quick to forget Hossa previously left the Penguins to chase a Stanley Cup with the Red Wings.

HILARY HIGGINS/REDEYE PHOTOS

Less than two minutes later, the Red Wings tied it and the place erupted as if it were announced that Uncle Kracker, Kid Rock and Eminem were touring together. The range of emotions during a playoff hockey game is as unpredictable as Amanda Bynes on a Friday night. Unfortunately for Wings fans, that goal was as good as it was going to get.

SECOND PERIOD

For almost the next two periods there were plenty of penalties but no goals. The crowd was in the zone but showed as much emotion as a Bill Belichick interview. I could tell they wanted to break out of their shell and erupt, but their team would not comply.

THIRD PERIOD

Midway through the third period, I had yet to hear “born and raised in South Detroit” ring out, and I hadn’t seen any palms pretending to be the map of Michigan.

The Blackhawks got the next goal and followed with another three minutes later. The mood in the bar was like everyone just found out Goose had died.

With three minutes left, the Wings looked to have put one past Blackhawks goaltender Corey Crawford, and the loudest cheer of the night broke out—they had closed it to a one-goal deficit.

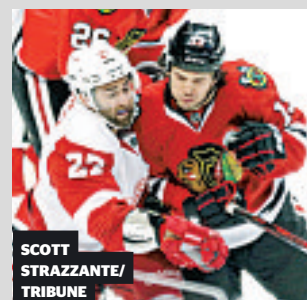

But wait! Upon further review, the puck did not go in, and the bar was in disbelief.

Moments later, an empty-net goal sealed it for the Hawks.

POSTGAME

Upon leaving Tin Lizzie, most Wings fans were ticked and had no interest in talking to me. They conveyed that this would be a long series, and that trash talk made me proud—that’s how true fans of any team should react after a loss.

The NHL playoffs are a cruel mistress who will toy with your emotions. Win or lose, Hawks or Wings, we all feel this way for one reason: Because it’s the Cup. ROB CRESSY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

1	Make a prediction for Game 3 of the Hawks-Wings series.	Hawks 27, Evil Empire 0.	I'm gonna go through all my anxiety meds.	First-timers to The Joe will be surprised and delighted by its beauty and modernity.	Wings fans will be keeping their 'pi in their pants. (As in octopi.)	Hawks win 4-1. Beers consumed: 16.
2	How can Viktor Stalberg get back in Coach Quenneville's good graces?	Keep the yapper shut and DON'T talk to the mustache.	Buying Coach Q a lifetime supply of mustache wax would be a start.	Mail him a handwritten apology letter—it's such a nice surprise to get snail mail these days.	By putting "Byfluglien" on the back of his jersey.	A good hug and a built pat go a long way, right?
3	The Charlotte Bobcats might want to be the Hornets again. Discuss.	They're still playing?	Just call them the Jordanaires and be done with it already.	Flop as a bobcat, stink as a bee?	Why not call them the Charlotte MJs? As in, his ownership has produced "Mostly Junk."	YES. YES. Sell the Raptors to Seattle while you're at it.
4	Convince David Beckham to buy the Chicago Fire.	David, your wife is hot. We'd like to see more of her in Chicago.	You can name them after yourself like Michael Jordan just did in the last question!	I'll give you a massage at the end of every long workday. (I'm willing to make that sacrifice for the city.)	You'll be the most successful Beckham in town.	Becks, we have hot women and cold beer. Fire up. Love to Section B, BTW.
5	What should the new DePaul basketball arena be called?	Tax Dollar Arena.	The Mistake at McPier.	The Pit of Despair?	We Built This Instead of Keeping Open Some Chicago Public Schools Arena.	We Will Get Blown out by Villanova Arena.

Who's coming back to competition? Who's leaving? It was a busy weekend. Allow us to sort it out.

David Beckham

Mr. Posh Spice played what might have been his last professional soccer game Saturday in Paris (it's unclear whether he'll play in his club's finale next week). "I want to enjoy my family now," an emotional Becks told the crowd. "Merci, Paris. I'm very sad to be leaving but thank you."

John Danks

White Sox manager Robin Ventura said Sunday that the White Sox will wait at least until they return home before making a decision on whether to activate left-hander John Danks from the disabled list. Danks, who underwent left shoulder surgery Aug. 6, made his fourth rehab start Saturday.

Michael Phelps

Responding to reports that he's contemplating a comeback for the 2016 Olympics in Brazil, the greatest swimmer of all time tweeted this Friday: "Why do I keep getting texts about coming back? Do ppl really believe everything they hear or read? There are too many ppl in the world that think they have a 'story'..."

What the Hova?

Jay-Z sure knows how to spoil his new clients. Former Notre Dame basketball star Skylar Diggins, who signed with Jay-Z's sports agency group Roc Nation, was surprised at her graduation Sunday with a new Mercedes, complete with a red bow. Diggins and Roc Nation posted the photos on their Instagram accounts.

Alyssa Leonard celebrates after scoring a goal against Penn State. TRACY ALLEN/FOR TRIBUNE

Have mercy, Wildcats!

NU lacrosse advances to 9th straight Final Four

Chicago Tribune

There is a "mercy rule" in women's college lacrosse, designed to prevent final scores from getting too lopsided.

You wouldn't think it would be needed during an NCAA tournament quarterfinal matching the country's second- and seventh-ranked teams.

It was Saturday night because Northwestern was mercilessly efficient in its execution during the first half of a 15-7 victory over Penn State in Evanston.

The victory sent the second-seeded Wildcats (19-2) to the Final Four for the ninth straight year. They will meet No. 3 North Carolina (16-3) on Friday at Villanova University. The Tar Heels beat Northwestern 11-8 at Chapel Hill in the third game of the season.

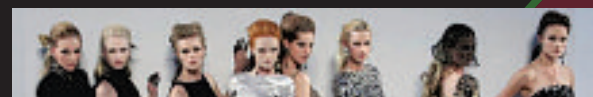

Undefeated No. 1 Maryland plays No. 4 Syracuse in the other semifinal. The final is next Sunday.

"A lot of people think it is automatic we are going to get to the Final Four, but it is very hard to get there," Northwestern coach Kelly Amonte Hiller said.

The Wildcats, who have won the past two NCAA titles and seven of the last eight, played so well from the opening draw they made it look easy Saturday.

Chicago pinball stars to flip for world title

By Adam Lukach

FOR REDEYE

Chicago brothers Zach and Josh Sharpe won't just be presiding over the World Pinball Championship at the end of May. As two of the world's top-ranked players, they also will participate in the tournament.

The championship spans three days, from May 31 to June 2, at Freddy's Pinball Paradise in Frankfurt, Germany. It's staged by the International Flipper Pinball Association—the organization of which Zach Sharpe is president and Josh Sharpe is vice president.

"I feel like Sy Sperling, the Hair Club for Men guy who also uses the product," Josh, 33, said with a laugh. "It's a labor of love, with us being players."

The best 64 pinballers in the world, who hail from 19 different countries, will dance with the zigs and zags of a 2.6-ounce silver ball while spectators breathe over their shoulders, watching every flip.

The tournament is modeled after March Madness, Josh said, with a pseudo-pool play round where groups of four competitors play three different machines, with game themes ranging from Metallica to The Avengers to "Lord of the Rings." That round cuts competitors down to 32 before the tourney becomes a single-elimination, head-to-head test to advance.

That's when the intensity amps up and the tournament really starts to take on its tenuous all-or-nothingness. They're playing for a new Stern Pinball table of their choice, but mostly for the right to be the best in the world.

"Playing at the pinnacle of competition in anything is physically and emotionally exhausting—one little slip-up and you can miss the top 32," Josh said. "It's the same intensity as a March Madness game. You get caught in one of those 5-12 [seed] games, and you can feel it in the arena. A team is pressing, and you know."

The pressure isn't shared among a team, though, as Zach, 31, pointed out: Both thrills and anguish are isolated to the person behind the flippers.

"It's just like watching Sergio [Garcia] hit two in the water on 17, and you go from being in the lead to dropping all the way to 10th, because, I don't want to be vulgar, but, you know, he poops the bed," he said. "It's the same wild swings. One moment you're about to win or advance, and one bad ball, and you're not."

The Sharpe brothers have felt this pressure and will again this year. Zach is ranked third in the world while Josh, a former Top 10 player, currently is ranked 15th.

SHOW PATROL

Don't get used to "The Goodwin Games," Fox's new comedy about three damaged siblings competing for their dad's $23 million estate. I don't think it will be around very long.

It seems fairly obvious Fox isn't committed to the sitcom. The network pushed it from the fall 2012 schedule, then reportedly cut its 13-episode order to seven. Now it's burning off the episodes on Monday nights with repeats of "Raising Hope," "New Girl" and "The Mindy Project."

You're likely to understand Fox's hesitation with "The Goodwin Games" after seeing the premiere, which introduces the characters and the premise, but with only a few laughs.

Created by Carter Bays and Craig Thomas of "How I Met Your Mother" fame as well as Chris Harris, it stars Beau Bridges as the siblings' father, who royally screwed them up when he was alive by constantly pitting them against each other in contests. Before his death, he recorded his posthumous wishes on VHS tapes and, in an effort to bring his children back together, he's putting them through a new series of competitions.

Scott Foley plays uptight older brother Henry, an overachieving doctor who drinks too much and avoids his emotions. Becki Newton plays sister Chloe, an aspiring but underachieving actress. T.J. Miller stars as Jimmy, their dim-bulb younger brother who finishes his latest stint in prison when we meet him.

Miller's madcap sensibilities and flashback scenes to when the children were young goose things a bit, but overall the show feels flat. The premiere, in which they play an elaborate game of Trivial Pursuit featuring customized questions and answers about their lives, seems to set up what I fear will be a repetitive format: Each week dad gives kids a new assignment that brings out their worst, but through the competition they learn to forgive and love each other.

Blech. That's not a game worth playing repeatedly.

Motive

9 p.m. Monday, ABC

The high-school loner named Tom is the killer in the series premiere of ABC's crime procedural "Motive."

Before you dash off an angry email or tweet to me crying spoilers, understand that I've spoiled nothing the show doesn't within the first minutes of each episode. Created by "Dexter" producer Daniel Cerone, "Motive" begins by introducing "THE KILLER" (yes, in all caps on screen) and "THE VICTIM." It then dives into the gimmick signaled by its title—the whydunit, if you will.

But for viewers, unraveling the why is neither as fun nor as interesting as discovering the who. Look at it this way: Would "Dallas" or "Twin Peaks" have branded themselves into the pop cultural landscape with teaser lines like "Why did someone shoot J.R.?" or "Why was Laura Palmer killed?"

That's not to say that "Motive" doesn't have anything going for it. Kristin Lehman, whom some might remember from the whodunit "The Killing" (which, coincidentally, used the line "Who killed Rosie Larsen?" in its promotions), plays Det. Angie Flynn. Both believable and appealing as the hard-bitten homicide investigator, Lehman provides the only real motive for tuning in.

Her Flynn is a single mom who has the uncanny ability to ferret out a murderer within 20 minutes of each episode. She and her partner, Det. Oscar Vega (Louis Ferreira) spend the rest of each hour trying to make an arrest after proving the murderer's motive.

In the premiere, Tom (Tyler Johnston) doesn't have much a motive for killing a teacher (played by former New Kid on the Block Joey McIntyre), which is an unfortunate way to kick off a show called "Motive."

The show's better second episode, airing Thursday when "Motive" moves into its regular time slot, is about a mayoral candidate who runs over his babysitter because—I can't tell you! That would be a spoiler.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Gemini May 21-June 21

Four planets are bringing you positive energy. You'll go on 17 dates, make strangers fall in love with you and feel like the world's most powerful superhero. Don't agree to marry someone you've just met.

Cancer June 22-July 22

You know those mood swings of yours? A lunar eclipse is not going to make them any better. You'll be raging against the machine, ranting about your evil boss and declaring your intention to leave your significant other.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

You could be hung up on two people at once as a fiery moon makes you super-passionate. You're lusting after a neighbor, coworker or acquaintance. And you're already involved with someone who is enticing and lusty just like you.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

The moon is telling you to deal with facts. If things aren't working out with someone, admit it. Or if you broke up with someone years ago, there's no use stalking him or her on Facebook.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

With four planets increasing your sexual mojo, you could make your dreams come true. If there is someone you've had your eye on, ask him or her out. If you've been trying to heal a tortured relationship, you'll finally get lucky.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

As a Water sign, you have natural psychic ability. The moon says trust your intuition. If you have a sick feeling that your honey still is sending sexy texts to his ex, you're probably right.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

You and your partner are having petty arguments. You want to decorate your home in a modern style; your honey wants French Provincial. The sun says work it out.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

You're trying to figure out what is fair, thanks to the moon. It's not fair that your girlfriend insists on maintaining a "friends with benefits" status with her ex. Voice your complaints.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

A bunch of planets are helping you. If you've been trying to attract the attention of a special someone, romance could strike. If you've been hoping to reunite with a lost love, your former flame might return your calls.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

You'll play peacemaker as Neptune increases your sense of civic responsibility. If your roommates are arguing, you'll intervene. If two friends of yours who are married are threatening to break up, you'll save the day.

Aries March 21-April 19

With the moon opposite your sign, you're not sure what to make of your sweetheart. Part of you is madly in love, but the other part of you is wondering if you should run for it.

Taurus April 20-May 20

You're obsessed with finding ways to make things work. Saturn is putting you in a "can do" mood. You're convinced that your relationships just need a few minor fixes.

Miley Cyrus

This is wackadoo, but if Miley wants to be the glitter ambassador for crocheted NASCAR, Miley gon' be the glitter ambassador for NASCAR.

Selena Gomez

Selena was, like, the first person on the red carpet, which means she probably slunk off to the bathroom after this to make out with the Bieb. This dress is actually crazy fun, but the flesh snake on the front is DEFINITELY for him.

Wiz Khalifa and Amber Rose

Her face says that these two will be having a discussion when they get home. We kinda wanted a red carpet baby too.

Z LaLa

It's Lady Gaga, right? It's gotta be Lady Gaga. Because the only other option is that this thing escaped from the fairy trap in Ke$ha's backyard.

Ke$ha

We often forget how pretty Ke$ha is when a metallic glitter monster isn't eating her face, in a very normal-person way. Her a$$ was her date to this event.

Jason Derulo

We've decided that Jason is only allowed to wear sleeveless shirts from now on, and thank him in advance for complying. Although they do distract from his adorable face, so hmm...

SCARPET RIDE

Step right up for the Billboard Music Awards

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

You totally watched the Billboard Music Awards on Sunday, right? Yeah, OK, there was outside happening. But if you weren't paying attention, you missed some pretty great red carpet action from VEGAS, because really, that's where all award shows should be held. Can you imagine host Tracy Morgan playing roulette? Anyway, here's what happened. DMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | REDEYEDANA.COM; GETTYIMAGES PHOTOS

THESE ARE THINGS THAT HAPPENED IN KANYE WEST'S WORLD OVER THE WEEKEND.

- On Friday, he unveiled the song "New Slaves" by projecting the music video on the sides of 66 buildings around the globe, including a handful in Chicago.
- On Saturday, he performed "New Slaves" and "Black Skinhead" on "Saturday Night Live."
- Also on Saturday, Kim Kardashian confirmed via Instagram that West's next album will, in fact, be titled "Yezus" and will drop June 18.

Miguel misses the mark

Taylor Swift and Justin Bieber won awards and OH MY GOD did you see Miguel misjudge a stage jump and kick two fans during Sunday's Billboard Music Awards?! He finished the song like a pro, but there was no immediate word on the fans' conditions.

Team single?

Robert Pattinson and Kristen Stewart's off-screen romance seemingly has taken another turn. People and Us Weekly magazines both reported that the two have broken up. Neither actor has commented on the fresh round of rumors.

REDEYE ILLUSTRATION

THE DIGIT

$70.6 MILLION

That's how much "Star Trek Into Darkness" beamed up to win the domestic box office in its opening weekend, Reuters reports. That's well below the $75.2 million the 2009 movie took in during its first weekend.

Bieb's monkey business

Justin Bieber owes monkey support. German authorities say they plan to seek thousands of dollars from Canada's favorite son after his capuchin monkey was seized in Munich without the proper paperwork. The Associated Press reports. An animal shelter has cared for Mally for the past two months, and the state is on the verge of taking full custody.

“I'd like to have sex with a dinosaur, Liberace and Patrick Swayze.”

—Ke$ha. In an epic interview with huffingtonpost.com. Asked which species of dinosaur, she replied: "Obviously it would be with a T-Rex."
